Prerequisites

Sociology 1-30 credits or the equivalent.

Objectives

Students shall during this course deepen their ability to independently examine and analyse social phenomena, on the level of everyday life as well as on a structural level, by the use of sociological theories and methods.

After completing the course, students shall:

- have acquired advanced knowledge of sociological theories and methods
- be able to independently analyse and explain social phenomena, such as sex, family, ethnicity, inequality, globalization and religion, by the use of sociological theory
- have acquired a critical approach to social phenomena as well as to existing models applied to explain these phenomena
- be able to independently formulate an issue concerning a sociological problem area or phenomenon such as sex, family, ethnicity, inequality, globalization or religion
- be able to independently construct and carry out a sociological study by the use of sociological methods.

Content

The course consists of four modules:

Module 1 Theory 7.5 credits

The course gives a systematic overview of classic and modern sociological theories and schools of thought.

Module 2 Contemporary sociological theory 7.5 credits

This course is an independent study course within an individually selected area of expertise. Students practice the application of concepts and theories used within various fields of knowledge, and the course also introduces sociological studies in these fields.

Module 3 Sociological method 7.5 credits

This course discusses areas such as defining a problem, selection methods, and data acquisition methods such as questionnaires, interviews, observations and document analysis. Furthermore, processing as well as analysis of data is also treated. The course also discusses theory of science and methodological reasoning.

Module 4 Essay and field work 7.5 credits

The course contains field studies within a concrete research area. In this context, collection and processing of self-produced input is carried out. Writing and presentation of a minor essay is part of the course.

Type of Instruction

Teaching consists of lectures, group work, seminars, practical sessions and field studies.

Examination

The course is assessed with the grades Fail (U), Pass (G) or Pass with Distinction (VG).

Examination of the course is carried out through written and oral examinations, and compulsory participation in seminars.

Course Evaluation

After completing the course, a course evaluation is carried out, which is compiled in writing and presented to the students. It is later filed in accordance with the department's regulations.

Other

This course may be included in the the International Social Sciences Programme 180 credits, the Human Resource Management Programme 180 credits, and it can be studied as a freestanding course. The course is a compulsory part of the Sociology Programme.
